Proceedings

1 THE COURT: If I could have appearances,
2 Plaintiff first.

3 MR. ROBERT: Good morning, your Honor. Clifford 4 Robert along with Albert Chang and Jamie Baskin for the 5 Plaintiff. Mr. Baskin, will be doing the argument this 6 morning. Bottini & Bottini firm.

7 THE COURT: For Defendants?

8 MS. FLATH: Good morning, your Honor. Lara Flath
9 from Skadden Arps on behalf of the moving Defendant. Also 10 with me on video are my colleagues Scott Musoff and Boris 11 Bershteyn. There may be a few others in the waiting room if 12 your Honor is able to admit everyone else.

13 THE COURT: I've admitted everyone.

14 MS. FLATH: There we go. They're probably below.
15 I believe, we also have a representative from Barclays on 16 the line, your Honor, on the video.

17 THE COURT: Okay.

18 MS. FLATH: Thank you.

19 THE COURT: Some people are camera shy.
20 Go ahead, counsel.

21 MS. FLATH: Thank you, your Honor. On behalf of 22 the moving Defendants which includes Barclays Capital
23 Incorporated along with the six individual Defendants who do 24 not challenge personal jurisdiction. We're here today on 25 the Motion to Dismiss the complaint. Plaintiff is a

LL

Proceedings

1 litigant that has sought to bring multiple of these 2 derivative actions in New York State Court purportedly on 3 behalf of foreign domiciled corporations against this 4 company's current and former directors and officers.

5 Now, there are a number of reasons that we've 6 raised in our motion as to why this case should and can be 7 dismissed, but with the Court's permission, we would like to 8 focus first upon the issue of standing under English law and 9 two decisions that provide a roadmap for which this case 10 should be dismissed without leave to replead. Those are the 11 City of Philadelphia v. Winters, which related to standard
12 charters derivative suit that was just decided in February 13 of this year, by Justice Driscoll in Nassau County and the 14 and City of Aventura Police Officer's Retirement Fund versus 15 Arison. The Carnival derivative suit decided and dismissed
16 by Justice Cohen in this court. Both of those cases
17 involved derivative suits brought on behalf of UK 18 incorporated companies, brought in New York State Court, and 19 we respectfully submit are directly on point.

20 In assessing the issue of standing, the internal 21 affairs doctrine dictates that claims regarding the 22 relationship between the corporation, its directors, and its 23 shareholder are governed by the substantive law of the 24 country of incorporation. New York Courts routinely apply 25 the internal affairs doctrine in derivative actions such as

LL

Proceedings

1 this. Now, because Barclays, PLC, which is the sole nominal
2 Defendant is incorporated in the United Kingdom, English law
3 governs the substantive question of the Plaintiff's standing 4 to bring this derivative action. And regardless of whether 5 the Plaintiff is bringing its claims under English Common
6 Law or the UK Companies Act, only members of a corporation
7 have standing to assert a shareholder derivative claim.
8 This proposition is supported both by the testimony of 9 Barclays English law expert Mr. Martin Moore, as well as the 10 Arison decision from Justice Cohen.

11 Now, being a member of a corporation in the 12 United Kingdom is not just owning shares, an individual has 13 to also be entered in the register of members. Here, 14 Plaintiff has conceded that it is not a registered member.
15 And that admission can end the entire inquiry just as it did
16 in Arison. In Arison, Justice Cohen considered this issue 17 in connection with a derivative suit brought pursuant to the 18 UK Companies Act which is what Plaintiff urges should be 19 done here. And Justice Cohen held that the membership
20 requirement is a substantive limit on shareholder standing 21 to assert a derivative claim, it is not merely a procedural 22 hurdle, thus New York Courts are obliged to apply it under 23 the internal affairs doctrine.

24 And as a result because plaintiff cannot satisfy 25 that requirement, it does not have standing to bring these

LL

Proceedings

1 claims and this case should be dismissed. The same result
2 should apply even if Plaintiff is proceeding under English
3 Common Law as Defendants argued. Mr. Moore explained this 4 and, again, Plaintiff does not dispute that under English
5 Common Law, one must be a member to assert a shareholder 6 derivative suit. So, respectfully, your Honor, we would 7 submit that that is enough. The case should be dismissed
8 for a lack of standing. We would also submit --

9 THE COURT: Give me the citation on the City of 10 Philadelphia case with Justice Driscoll.

11 MS. FLATH: Absolutely, your Honor. That is 12 Index Number 601438-20. And we submitted it to your Honor
13 as well as in our docket entry NYSCEF 40 with a decision 14 attached at 41.

15 THE COURT: Does it have any Westlaw or Lexis?

16 MS. FLATH: It does not as of this morning, your 17 Honor.

18 THE COURT: Okay.

19 MS. FLATH: And that was issued just in February 20 of 2022.

21 THE COURT: Okay. Go ahead.

22 MS. FLATH: Now, your Honor, respectfully, this 23 is not a situation where we believe that leave to amend
24 should be granted to allow Plaintiff to cure this defect.
25 Even if Plaintiff could somehow establish that it is a

LL

Proceedings

1 member, which it is not, that standard -- that Justice
2 Driscoll decision, the City of Philadelphia remains on 3 point. In that case the plaintiff actually did become a 4 member during the pendency of the motion to dismiss, but 5 that was still not enough to confer standing to pursue a 6 derivative claim under English law. Now, just to level set 7 the Companies Act versus English Common Law for a moment, we 8 set forth in our motion that because Plaintiff has chosen to 9 bring suit in New York, he is proceeding -- excuse me, it is 10 proceeding outside the Companies Act which applies only to 11 suits that are brought in England and Wales. Because the 12 Plaintiff chose to file here and is not proceeding under the 13 Companies Act, it must establish that it then has standing
14 under English Common Law to bring this derivative suit.

15 Plaintiff in opposition claimed that there was no
16 support for this position and it was effectively the ipse
17 dixit of Mr. Moore our English law expert. But this 18 situation, is exactly the circumstance that Justice Driscoll 19 in the City of Philadelphia case faced and this is exactly
20 how he answered the question. Justice Driscoll carefully 21 parsed the exact question that had been left open by the 22 Second Department in the Mason-Mahon case, which involved a 23 derivative suit brought on behalf of several HSBC entities, 24 also in Nassau County. The question that was left open as 25 Justice Driscoll articulated and he had had that original

LL

Proceedings

1 decision in Mason-Mahon, so unsurprisingly he parsed that 2 very closely. Whether English common law governs the 3 Plaintiff's standing to maintain derivative claims on behalf 4 of an English company in a New York Court because the 5 judicial permission requirement does not apply outside of 6 the United Kingdom. And what Justice Driscoll found through 7 his analysis is that, yes, English Common Law does apply, 8 thus, Plaintiff must satisfy one of the exceptions to the 9 English Common Law rule of Foss v. Harbottle, which sets 10 forth a limited number of exceptions for which a shareholder
11 may bring a derivative claim.

12 Now, in answering that question and reaching this 13 decision, Justice Driscoll was persuaded by the assessment 14 of the English law expert in that case who also was 15 Mr. Moore. Mr. Moore opined that the UK Companies Act is a 16 comprehensible and indivisible code, so the claim is either 17 inside it or outside of it. And by bringing suit in 18 New York, Plaintiff has chosen to proceed outside of it.
19 Mr. Moore offered that same testimony in this case and 20 Plaintiff has offered no rebuttal. Now, this outcome is not 21 going to end up such that Plaintiff would urge that, this 22 means he cannot -- it cannot bring any derivative suit in 23 New York. What it means is that in order to be able to do 24 so on behalf of an English company, they must satisfy the 25 requirements of English Common Law articulated by Foss v.

LL

Proceedings

1 Harbottle.

2 There is only one exception to that common law
3 requirement that Plaintiff has argued could apply here, that 4 is the fraud on the minority exception. And as Mr. Moore
5 explains and as Justice Driscoll also held in similar 6 circumstances that is not something that an English court is 7 likely to find satisfied by Plaintiff's allegations here.
8 In order to satisfy this exception, Plaintiff under English 9 law must establish that the alleged wrongdoer have a high 10 degree of control. And that means a de facto control of 11 devoting shares of the company.

12 Now, as of the time of the filing of this action, 13 Barclays PLC's directors owned approximately 0.16 percent of 14 the company's outstanding shares, it is not a fact that has 15 been disputed. But as a result it means that they cannot 16 have de facto control. Plaintiffs also cannot satisfy the 17 other requirement of fraud on minority exception. They do 18 not plead that any benefit to the directors or officers at 19 the expense of the company other than their standard
20 compensation, which is not sufficient under English law.
21 Simply put, your Honor, the City of Philadelphia case is on 22 all fours here. Plaintiff, by bringing suit in New York, is 23 proceeding outside the Companies Act and then that therefore 24 falls under English Common Law. Because they cannot satisfy
25 one of the exceptions to pursue a claim under English common

LL

Proceedings

1 law, they do not have standing.

2 We would note, too, your Honor, this is also 3 consistent with how the First Department assessed the issue 4 in the Davis case, Davis v. Scottish Re. In that case, the 5 New York Court of Appeals held that the Cayman Islands
6 Judicial Permission Rule was procedural. And then on 7 remand, the First Department said because that is a 8 procedural rule, Plaintiff's do not have to satisfy it to 9 bring suit in New York, but they do have to satisfy common 10 law standings and apply the Foss v. Harbottle exception and 11 found in that case that plaintiff thereto had not satisfied
12 the fraud in the minority exception. So for those reasons, 13 your Honor, we submit that the Plaintiff does not have 14 standing under English law to be able to pursue this. But 15 even if Plaintiff could establish standing, we think this is 16 still and respectfully submit this is a case that should be 17 dismissed pursuant to the Court's discretion under the 18 doctrine of forum non conveniens.

19 Plaintiff cites numerous instances of purported
20 New York activity, but fundamentally, this case is about 21 whether or not Barclays PLC's current and former directors 22 and officers, breached a duty of fiduciary care owed to the 23 corporation. Those activities and that alleged wrongdoing 24 occurred in the United Kingdom. Barclays PLC, again, is 25 incorporated in the United Kingdom and has its headquarters

LL

Proceedings

1 there; that's the alleged breach. And in the circumstance
2 of a shareholder derivative suit where the Plaintiff is 3 seeking to step into the shoes of the corporation, that is 4 where any alleged lost or harm would have occurred. That is 5 a strong factor that weighs in favor of dismissing under 6 forum non conveniens.

7 Similarly, the United Kingdom has an interest in 8 the regulation and internal affairs of its corporations, 9 whereas New York has a much more limited, if any, interest.
10 Similarly, in this case as to others, the documents,
11 witnesses, and the large majority of Defendants are located 12 outside of New York. All but six of over 40 individual 13 Defendants are outside of New York. In addition, to the 14 nominal Defendant, of course, being a United Kingdom 15 resident. And without question, there is an available and 16 adequate forum, English Courts provide that forum and a 17 number of cases have so held. Plaintiffs only response --

18 THE COURT: Are most of the Defendants in the 19 United Kingdom or are they just outside of New York?

20 MS. FLATH: Your Honor, the majority are in the 21 United Kingdom, but not all exclusively. And certainly 22 there are only six that consented to personal jurisdiction 23 in New York, the rest have reserved rights to be able to 24 challenge that. Plaintiff's response, your Honor, is to 25 argue that because it is a New York resident, its choice of

LL

Proceedings

1 forum should be given the heaviest weight. But, again,
2 because this is not a direct action being brought by a
3 New York resident but a derivative suit, that factor 4 receives less consideration in the analysis.

5 Indeed, one of the other cases that Plaintiff 6 president and the same counsel have brought recently was 7 dismissed by Justice Borrok in part on forum non-conveniens
8 grounds despite Plaintiff's New York residency. Your Honor, 9 we submit that those two reasons are certainly enough to 10 dismiss the entire action and have set forth additional 11 rationales and reasons for that as well, which I'm happy to 12 continue walking through.

13 THE COURT: That's fine. Let me hear from your 14 adversary. If you could unmute, Mr. Baskin. You could 15 unmute, yourself, please.

16 MR. BASKIN: Can you hear me now?

17 THE COURT: Yes.

18 MR. BASKIN: Okay. Sounds like the commercial.

19 THE COURT: Yes.

20 MR. BASKIN: Jamie Baskin for the Plaintiffs,
21 your Honor. Let me just set the stage first. This is a 22 motion brought, as counsel said, by six New York residents 23 on forum non conveniens grounds and other grounds claiming 24 that it's an inconvenient forum for the six New York
25 resident, which makes very clear sense. Five of the six

LL

Proceedings

1 that bring the motion are former not current officers or 2 directors, five of the six. And that's important for 3 several reasons, first of all, because the first part of the 4 law is that the internal affairs doctrine does not apply in 5 cases involving former as opposed to current officer and 6 directors; that does not apply. That's in the Culligan
7 case. Also, in the New Greenwich Litigation Trustee case.

8 So as for most of the people bringing the motion
9 and actually most of the Defendants, the internal affairs 10 doctrine just doesn't apply. Now, the one of the six that 11 is a current Defendant are Mr. Venkatakrisnan -- I think I
12 have that right - is now the CEO of Barclays. He's a 13 New York resident. And actually three of the last four 14 Barclays PLC CEOs have been New Yorkers, with the fourth
15 owning property here in New York and spending a lot of time 16 here doing what CEOs of holding companies do, which is 17 managing their operating subsidiaries.

18 I point out that -- in the papers we submitted -- 19 that Barclays itself proclaimed that it is a holding 20 company, that it is anchored -- this is a quote "Anchored in 21 our two home markets of the UK and the US". The two home 22 markets -- the US market is clearly anchored in New York.
23 So the idea that Barclays PLC has nothing to do with 24 New York is just not right.

25 Moving to standing. Standing is, first of all, a

LL

Proceedings

1 choice of law issue. First of all, a choice of law issue.
2 Defendants say, well, internal affairs doctrine trumps all
3 and therefore English Law, we disagree. As I said, Culligan
4 and the New Greenwich Trust Litigation case both says, 5 internal affairs simply does not apply when it's former as 6 opposed to current officers. Now, choice of law should 7 start --

8 THE COURT: Why would that be? It seems that it
9 has nothing to do with the issue. The issue is -- the issue
10 is the Plaintiff not the Defendants.

11 MR. BASKIN: Well, the rationale of both those 12 cases -- this was the question both of them addressed
13 directly was that internal affairs governs the relations 14 between current shareholders and current officers and 15 directors. It didn't go into regular detail as to beyond 16 that. But it did say that because a number of the officers, 17 directors in those cases were former officers and directors, 18 New York Law would apply, not the law of the state of 19 incorporation or the nature of incorporation. And it said 20 clearly Culligan said -- I'm quoting here -- "Since the 21 internal affairs doctrine does not apply to those Defendants 22 who are not current officers, directors, and shareholders, 23 Bermuda Law does not apply to the claims asserted against 24 them. You've got two First Department cases that say that 25 pretty precisely, even if that weren't the case though the

LL

Proceedings

1 bigger point is that starting the --

2 THE COURT: For the Davis versus Scottish Re, 3 it's after --

4 MR. BASKIN: It is, your Honor, but it didn't 5 address former versus current.

6 THE COURT: Everything hinges on former versus 7 current when the issue is standing -- former versus current 8 Defendant when the issue is standing of the Plaintiff.
9 That's the problem, the analysis has nothing to do with the 10 standing of the Plaintiff to pursue, whether or not they 11 have an avenue against these former directors, the analysis
12 is on the wrong side.

13 MR. BASKIN: I would submit, your Honor, the 14 analysis has to start with choice of law and that's what 15 Culligan and New Greenwich Trustee was talking about was 16 choice of law. And it simply states you have a different 17 choice of law depending upon whether you had current or 18 former officers directives. But neither --

19 What Culligan addressed next, however, is even 20 more important and that is the fact that we have a statute
21 in New York, section 626 and section 1319-BCL that directly 22 addressed the standing point. Stepping back, the choice of 23 law issue ought to start with the primacy, which -- the 24 hierarchy of the law. The restatement addresses this 25 directly. It says, a court subject to constitutional

LL

Proceedings

1 restrictions will follow a statutory directive of its own
2 state on choice of law; that's section six sub one of the 3 restatement of complex and section six sub two or the 4 various common law rules if you don't have a statutory 5 directive. We do have a statutory directive here. 626 -- 6 BCL 626 not only provides a jurisdictional basis for the 7 court, but it provides standing.

8 THE COURT: Not all defense on the foreign 9 corporation is doing business in New York though?

10 MR. BASKIN: It does not, your Honor. Let me
11 explain.

12 THE COURT: The standard there, they lay out 13 certain things.

14 MR. BASKIN: If I could explain.

15 THE COURT: Go ahead, that's fine.

16 MR. BASKIN: 626 in and of itself provides for 17 jurisdiction and provides for standing for a holder of 18 shares or a holder of a beneficial interest in shares, 19 either one. There is nothing in 626 that says anything 20 about doing business in New York. Now, 1319 is an overlay.
21 And under general rules of statutory instruction it has to 22 have a separate purpose than 626. Some courts have said, 23 well, 1319 provides the jurisdictional basis, but 626 does 24 that all by itself. There is no need to add something on 25 because 626 speaks explicitly of foreign corporation

LL

1 derivative action. 626 stands on its own, in other words.

2 1319 does something else. It says, if you are 3 doing business in the state, then these provisions including 4 626 shall apply -- shall apply. Now, the question is what 5 is the something else that 1319 adds with the doing business 6 requirement. Looking back to over -- through the life of 7 the BCL since the early '60s and then its predecessors, the 8 something else is consent. This consent idea goes back to 9 Justice Cardozo with the German-American Coffee case and 10 comes back to the Aybar case just last year before the Court
11 of Appeals.

12 1319 is a -- 1317 like it -- are consent statutes
13 where the state imposes a consent condition on doing 14 business. The question is not is there a consent condition, 15 the question is what's being consented to, that's what Aybar
16 was about. What you're consenting to is less than what the 17 plaintiff said there. What we say is that the consent is to 18 conducting derivative litigation in New York under the rules 19 of 626 and 627, that's a consent that is required by 1319.
20 And with all respect, the City of Aventura case says, well, 21 it just provides a jurisdictional basis, but that reads 1319
22 out of the law because 626 does that standing on by itself.
23 The City of Aventura doesn't address what the something else
24 is that 1319 adds to the conversation.

25 THE COURT: Do you have any idea why -- what

LL

Proceedings

1 happened to the City of Aventura? Why -- was it appealed,
2 what happened to the appeal? I don't see any followup on 3 it.

4 MR. BASKIN: My understanding is that they 5 dismissed the case rather than go through the appeal. I'm 6 sure that's what happened. Culligan, this First Department 7 Culligan supports this is view that 1319 and 626 must be 8 honored. There may be issues involving standing that are 9 not dealt with specifically in 626 and 1319. And as to 10 other kinds of issues, maybe you go to the next level, which 11 -- or the common law rules. But as to whether one has to 12 have shares in his or her own name New York says no.

13 Do you understand almost every American retail 14 investor owns shares as a beneficial shareholder, 90 plus
15 percent? I mean, in the US, they're held by, you know, DTC
16 and CD and Company. And an American holder who holds in the 17 way that almost every American holder owns their stock
18 cannot be a member because to be a member you have to be a 19 direct holder. And that's really what the fight's about.
20 If you're a direct holder, all have you to do is send a 21 letter say I want to be on the register. And with all due 22 respect, I do not believe that we have not conceded that we 23 are not registered -- our client is not a registered 24 shareholder. I think that would be a matter for discovery.

25 THE COURT: How can that be a matter of

LL

Proceedings

1 discovery, that's either your client is or isn't; that's a
2 matter of pleading.

3 MR. BASKIN: It's a matter of the is or isn't, is 4 are you on a list that is not a public list. They say 5 you're not and we haven't seen; that would be the matter.

6 THE COURT: Do you plead that your clients are 7 registered shareholders, registered members?

8 MR. BASKIN: Yes.

9 THE COURT: You do?

10 MR. BASKIN: Yes.

11 THE COURT: Where? What paragraph?

12 MR. BASKIN: I'm going to ask my friend Mr. Chang.
13 here to pull that up as I continue.

14 THE COURT: Well, wait, I want to hear the answer
15 to that before we continue.

16 MR. BASKIN: Okay.

17 THE COURT: You made a statement that's slightly
18 contradicted by the other side, I need to know who's telling 19 the truth.

20 MR. BASKIN: Give me a moment. Paragraph 30,
21 page 19 says Plaintiffs shares are registered with Barclays
22 and is hence a member of the company under the English 23 Companies Act. That's the pleading, your Honor.

24 THE COURT: The shares are registered -- the 25 Plaintiff's shares are registered with Barclays.

LL

Proceedings

1 MR. BASKIN: Yes. Paragraph 30, page 19. But,
2 again, our view is that New York was -- New York had the 3 power, the legislature had the power to protect its citizens 4 which, it's done through 1319 and 626 knowing that most of 5 its citizens who hold stock both in domestic and 6 international corporation hold stock through intermediaries.

7 THE COURT: Does the state have that power, it
8 sounds like interstate commerce for foreign commerce, it
9 seems like that is a federal issue, not nothing the states 10 could do.

11 MR. BASKIN: Your Honor, it is something the 12 states could do, if you give me a moment to --

13 the test there is not -- as Defendant suggests 14 whether interstate commerce is implicated, there's a 15 specific test from the Pike versus Bruce Church case. It's 16 90 Supreme Court 844 at 847. And that test is picked up in 17 New York by Homier Air Distributing Company 90 New York 2d
18 153 at 158 and here's the test. Where a statute regulates 19 evenhandedly to effectuate a legitimate local interest, 20 local public interest and its effects on interstate commerce
21 are only incidental, it will be upheld unless the burden 22 imposed on such commerce is clearly excessive in relation to 23 the punitive and local benefits. That's --

24 When you go back to the Airtran case, it's 25 discussing undue burden on the interstate commerce, not just

LL

Proceedings

1 -- you might touch interstate commerce, undue burden, that's 2 kind of a term of art and the term of art is explained here
3 in the Pike Versus Bruce Church case. So the question is, 4 is there a local public interest, absolutely there is and 5 it's explained by the fact that most New York citizens and 6 most Americans own their stock beneficially, not directly.
7 And a rule that cuts out beneficial owners, cuts out 8 virtually every American retail owner. Does the state have 9 the power to say, we're going to let our citizens who are 10 beneficial owners sue in a derivative case, yes, it does, 11 that's a local public interest.

12 THE COURT: But it affects interstate foreign 13 commerce?

14 MR. BASKIN: It may affect interstate foreign 15 commerce. The question is not does it affect, but is it -- 16 is the burden imposed clearly excessive in relation to the 17 local benefit, it's not just does it touch it, it's a
18 weighing process with respect, your Honor, the legislature 19 made that --

20 THE COURT: If a bank in England has to answer to 21 every lawsuit by one of millions of potential shareholders, 22 certainly, it's a burden.

23 MR. BASKIN: The fact that an English bank or a 24 Delaware bank for that matter was, you know --

25 Foreign means both, you know, 49 states plus the

LL

Proceedings

1 foreign countries for these purposes have to answer
2 derivative cases that are supervised heavily by the 3 judiciaries, who it's not just you can run in with nothing
4 and say nothing and you submit yourself to the supervision
5 of your Honor. It does not seem to be the kind of burden
6 that would fail the Pike test.

7 THE COURT: What kind of burden would there be, I 8 think that's the biggest burden. The idea of being held to 9 answer -- held to answer a suit for money damages in a venue 10 that you didn't choose and that's not authorized under 11 English law.

12 MR. BASKIN: Well, let me go at that backwards.

13 THE COURT: Okay.

14 MR. BASKIN: This court --

15 The New York Court decides the choice of law 16 questions at the top. And the choice of law hierarchy is 17 right there in the restatement of conflicts section six says
18 that where you have a statutory directive of the state you 19 follow your own state's statutory directive.

20 THE COURT: Procedure?

21 MR. BASKIN: That's not about procedure, that's 22 about choice of law. And there is no reason why a state 23 can't --

24 THE COURT: A state -- New York State can say in 25 any case because we base our legislator, whatever new

LL

Proceedings

1 legislator is elected every two years can say that we decide
2 cased based on New York Law even though the case -- even 3 though the corporation has its offices in Delaware and does 4 business in California.

5 MR. BASKIN: That's been the law in New York for 6 over a hundred years. If you look at that German-American
7 Coffee case that Judge Cardozo wrote in 1915, involved a
8 New Jersey corporation and the question was -- had to do 9 with illegal dividends paid by the directors. In 10 New Jersey, the state incorporation only predators had the 11 right -- had standing to bring suit for those illegal 12 dividends. New York gave, yet in the predecessor of one of 13 these Article 13 statutes, New York gave the corporation
14 itself standing to bring suit for these illegal dividends.
15 Justice Cardozo said, yes, the substantive law of New Jersey 16 applies, but we can decide who can bring that suit for that 17 remedy and that's what they did. And that's the same case 18 where he said agreeing to these restrictions and these 19 regulations that are now in Article 13 is a condition to 20 doing business and if you don't want the restrictions don't 21 come here; that's the rationale.

22 It's been carried forward in the Pohler's case in 23 the '40s by the Court of Appeals and really in the Aybar
24 case just last year. Now, that case said you're wrong about 25 what consent was given, but you're not wrong that Article 13

LL

Proceedings

1 is a consent-driven regime. And so what you'd be doing
2 would be trying to overcome a hundred years of New York Law
3 by saying that the state doesn't have the constitutional 4 power to say that its residents who have stock beneficially
5 can sue. We submitted with -- excuse me, let me grab a 6 little bit of water, if you don't mind.

7 We submitted with Mr. Chang's affirmation a white
8 paper study done in the European union about the different 9 ways people hold stock in different companies -- countries.
10 They're just different regimes for holding stock. The 11 English use a different model for stock holding than the 12 Americans use a different model in Germany and for other 13 places. There is no logical reason why the American stock
14 holding model should be a roadblock to American stockholders
15 bringing derivative suits. That's what it would boil down
16 to is that because Americans hold true what's called a 17 entitlement sort of a holding pattern, which is what 18 instituted many years ago because of the number of shares
19 out there and the difficulty of people having their own 20 stock certificates and that sort of thing.

21 There is no reason why the way American holds 22 opposed to the way English holds or Germans holds stock is 23 all different than Americans and New Yorkers should be 24 excluded from derivative cases. That's why, you know,
25 choice of law, top level, statutory, directive New York made

LL

Proceedings

1 the decision, we are going to allow in our courts beneficial
2 owners as well as direct owners to bring derivative cases.
3 And I submit to, your Honor, that it's to the legislator to 4 decide is that overly burdensome as opposed to that 5 reasonable given the fact that virtually all American retail
6 owners are beneficial owners. The doing business -- let me 7 go back to that part, the Court seemed interested in the 8 doing business aspects.

9 Now, HSBC like this was an English bank holding 10 company in the court until -- HSBC was both doing business 11 both directly and indirectly in the United States and in 12 New York. Culligan First Department case excuse me -- the 13 Airtran First Department case speaks directly to that.
14 Barclays PLC is doing business in New York both directly and 15 indirectly. When I say directly, what holdings company do 16 -- holding companies manage and finance their operating 17 subsidiaries. And the board and senior executives of 18 Barclays PLC manage and finance their operating subsidiaries
19 here in the United States were their -- as they say -- two 20 home markets. The debt markets in New York and in their 21 presentations and their prospectuses for the debt markets.
22 They say we're raising billions of dollars in part to fund 23 our subsidiaries.

24 They also say we're going to use New York Law, 25 but that's an argument on the side here. But that's what

LL

Proceedings

1 they do and the executive -- three of the last four CEOs are 2 New Yorkers, senior management spends a lot of time in and 3 with New York providing management at oversight. And that's 4 direct doing business. The Airtran case takes it a step 5 further and says when you have a holding company operating 6 company setup, the operating company are, in effect, the 7 agents of the holding company because that's how the holding 8 company does operating business. There's a fairly lengthy 9 discussion in the Airtran case about that.

10 And that's the law in New York and in the First 11 Department is that not every subsidiary of every company
12 because they're different setups. The holding company, 13 operating company setups are where the holding company's 14 operations are done wholly through its subsidiaries and as 15 is the case here. The law is that that is doing business 16 both by the subsidiaries and that is doing business by the 17 holding company parent and the overlay that the Airtran case 18 put on it was that its doing business as an agent for the 19 holding company principal. And there is no reason not to 20 apply that construct to this case. I've been going quite a 21 while, I think I'll metaphorically sit down and address the 22 Court's questions.

23 THE COURT: Counsel.

24 MS. FLATH: Thank you, your Honor. If I may 25 respond just briefly. First, very briefly to address that

LL

Proceedings

1 the moving Defendants should not have raised a forum non 2 conveniens defense is directly contrary to the stipulation
3 that the parties agreed to and that the Court's entered 4 that's on the docket entry nine in which the parties agreed 5 that any defendants who is not challenging personal 6 jurisdiction would raise so-called global arguments
7 including forum non-conveniens. So it makes complete sense
8 for efficiency purposes and otherwise for that perspective 9 on the first page.

10 Second, briefly on the point about whether or not 11 the plaintiff is registered and whether they would have 12 conceded that would point the Court to their opposition, 13 which is NYSCEF Number 25 on page 16, footnote 9 that 14 states, "Plaintiff could become a 'member', but it would be 15 time consuming to achieve and cumbersome once achieved as 16 modern securities market depend on indirect holdings." Your 17 Honor that's impossible to reconcile with the fact that 18 they're already a registered member. In addition, we 19 submitted testimony from Hannah Elwood, which searched the 20 registry and Plaintiff was not listed. In response to that, 21 that is what they conceded in footnote nine of their 22 opposition. And, your Honor, membership does matter. Under 23 Plaintiff's theory here, New York could allow derivative
24 actions for New York shareholders even if UK corporate law 25 prohibited them altogether.

LL

Proceedings

1 And, in addition, in the Arison case, Justice
2 Cohen directly addressed this point, the membership 3 requirements is not plotting some procedural path or 4 otherwise, but it is creating a substantive pre-condition
5 for having the right to sue derivatively on behalf of a 6 corporation, and that provides stable guidance to 7 shareholders and even ADS, indirect holders in English 8 companies as to the scope of their rights to bring 9 derivative actions on behalf of the company. And the same 10 is true for corporate officers and directors who have more 11 than a passing interest in knowing whether and under what 12 circumstances they will be subject to derivative suits
13 outside the United Kingdom.

14 THE COURT: How do you address his argument that 15 there is a distinction to be drawn in applying the internal 16 affairs doctrine with respect to former directors?

17 MS. FLATH: Certainly, your Honor, in the 18 Mason-Mahon case in which the Plaintiffs certainly cites and 19 relies upon heavily, there were current and foreign 20 directors of HSBC. Nonetheless, the internal affairs 21 doctrine applied to that as well. And in Culligan, the 22 facts are very different, the Court found an exception to 23 the internal affairs doctrine because it was a Bermuda shell 24 corporation, but the office - the employees, the conduct all 25 of those facts at issue occurred in New York. And in the

LL

Proceedings

1 New Greenwich case that the Plaintiff also cited, it
2 discussed whether or not the internal affairs doctrine
3 should apply actually to a consultant, an auditor to PWC or 4 not. Those are all distinctions that in those circumstances 5 allows the Court to find the internal affairs doctrine did
6 not apply in those situation, but Culligan does not stand 7 for the proposition that 1319 is a choice of law.

8 And, in fact, as your Honor noted earlier, the 9 Davis Case or the Scottish Re case whichever way one refers
10 to it applies the internal affairs doctrine to derivative
11 corporation subsequent to Culligan. And in the Blau case, 12 which we cite in our papers, Justice Singh specifically 13 noted that Culligan was not intended to override the 14 internal affairs doctrine. So to suggest that somehow the 15 2014 decision in Culligan should be taken despite the Court
16 of Appeals subsequent action or otherwise simply does not 17 apply.

18 Then, finally, your Honor, with respect to these 19 provisions about doing business, the Airtran case certainly 20 states that in considering which provision of in Article 13
21 and what standard should be applied, one should consider 22 whether interstate commerce is affected. And, again, on 23 that point the Blau case and the David Shaev case that we 24 cite are both instructive. In Blau, Justice Singh stated 25 that section 1319 which necessarily relates to the ability

LL

Proceedings

1 of the Court assessing whether or not they can weigh in on 2 the internal affairs of a corporation implicates the 3 commerce clause. And as a result we are -- you know, we 4 believe, your Honor that the heightened doing business 5 requirement of New York Law should apply here, not the 6 purposeful availment standard that Plaintiffs are arguing.
7 In addition, after Airtran was decided, the Supreme Court
8 came out with the decision in Daimler which holds that 9 certainly as a matter of general jurisdiction you need more 10 to be able to assert that a foreign parent corporation is 11 doing business.

12 And, respectfully, your Honor, the points about 13 holding meetings or otherwise having some business, we 14 addressed that in our reply which is NYSCEF 34. But under 15 the statute itself, 1301(b), holding meetings of directors 16 or shareholders, maintaining or defending actions or 17 proceedings, none of those are sufficient to establish that 18 Barclays PLC, the UK incorporated entity is doing business.
19 Similarly, tapping the debt market, we cite a case law on 20 that as well, your Honor because that does not satisfy the 21 doing business requirement. With that, your Honor, I 22 believe, I've addressed the questions unless your Honor has 23 other ones for me.

24 THE COURT: I just want to -- I just want to get 25 your response, I'm looking at the Blau case and it does say

LL

Proceedings

1 that at some point in speaking about the Hart -- it says
2 Hart also relied on a decision from the United States
3 Supreme Court which concluded that the law of the state of 4 incorporation must govern a corporation's internal affairs, 5 matters peculiar to the relationships among or between the 6 corporation and its current officers and directors. Just -- 7 I'm just kind of throwing that at you, but I'm 8 just concerned because it does call for somehow a limitation 9 at least in that sentence to the idea of the internal 10 affairs being something focused on current directors as 11 opposed to former directors.

12 MS. FLATH: Understood, your Honor. And, again,
13 I would go back to just the Mason-Mahon case, which I
14 involved current director of HSBC as well as the other 15 instances that we've discussed where courts in this division
16 have held that the internal affairs doctrine has applied.
17 Certainly, current and former directors were named as 18 defendants in the Bayer derivative action that Justice
19 Borrok just dismissed applying the internal affairs doctrine 20 and based upon German law standing as well as forum non 21 conveniens. So that has not been held as sort of this 22 provision in which that is the fundamental issue. And, your 23 Honor, the cause of action that Plaintiffs are purporting to 24 do here is that they are suing former directors based upon 25 their breaches while they were are purported current

LL

Proceedings

1 officers or directors. So truly fundamentally, this relates 2 to the interest of the corporation with respect to its 3 governing board at the time. They happened to have brought 4 suit going back to May, 2008. So inherently, many of these 5 individuals are no longer with Barclays PLC, if they were 6 ever. Thank you, your Honor.

7 THE COURT: Mr. Baskin, looks like you want to 8 say something, unmute yourself, please.

9 MR. BASKIN: Can you hear me now?

10 THE COURT: Yes.

11 MR. BASKIN: I will say something, hopefully not 12 much. First, there's lot of reasons why the Defendants 13 would like to wish away the Culligan case. They talk about, 14 you know, things they found in briefs, but aren't in the 15 case itself. The case stands for what it stands for, two 16 propositions: One that internal affairs only applies to 17 current officers/directors.

18 Secondly, that the 1319 626 regime cannot be 19 ignored.

20 THE COURT: Now, Counsel, just getting back to 21 that, the things that you're complaining about were about 22 the directors when they were current, right? You're not 23 talking about some separate special gifts that the directors 24 got when they were -- after they left their positions. In 25 fact, the argument -- one of the arguments that they make is

LL

Proceedings

1 simply that you're complaining about what -- the benefits or 2 salaries the directors had while they were serving as 3 director. So you are talking about current directors. If 4 we're looking at -- if we're assessing the point of the 5 internal affairs thing, we're looking at the idea of 6 scrutinizing how a corporation deals with its directors and 7 officers. Then what we're talking about is that 8 corporation's actions at the time that these directors and 9 officers were current. We're not asking --

10 We're not talking about some separate
11 accommodations that are being provided that they are today
12 giving free air travel or other perks to these directors;
13 that's not part of your complaint.

14 MR. BASKIN: It is certainly correct that we are 15 suing them for acts or omissions during the time that they 16 were all search directors. But let's go back and look, what 17 is the internal affair's doctrine, it is simply a choice of 18 law rule. And what Culligan says in some of the directors
19 were being sued for what they did when they were directors
20 and Culligan court says, that choice of law rule doesn't 21 apply to formers. The bigger point though is that the 22 choice of law rule that does apply and its -- the statutory 23 rule. Let's sit back and realize that 48 or 49 states don't 24 have a similar rule to New York. So you'll see cases from 25 other places that say, oh, yes, it has to be internal

LL

Proceedings

1 affairs because that seems to be sort of a top level common
2 law rule. But those other states don't have statutory 3 directives that New York has. And so when you look at the 4 hierarchy. I urge your Honor to look at restatement second 5 of the conflicts section six. The hierarchy is first if 6 there is a choice of law rule that is in a state statute, 7 you follow it.

8 Second, in the absence of such a statutory 9 director, here are the rules. And with respect to the 10 internal affairs doctrine is in that second lower hierarchy 11 rule trumped at all times by the statutory director. It is 12 true that we entered into a stipulation. We did not in the 13 stipulation waive the burden that the movants must meet to 14 prove forum non conveniens. The six individuals are the 15 ones advocating forum non conveniens, those six are 16 residents of New York including as I say the current CEO, 17 one past CEO, who is a New Yorker and who is a movant and 18 there is a New York past CEO Mr. Staley, who for whatever 19 reason is not a movant, but he lives Manhattan in the 20 Hamptons and is another one that was one of the active 21 wrongdoers here.

22 I'll say one more thing. The Norman case which 23 we cite, second circuit case and Professor Demetz argue in 24 the article that we cite, both say that this 1319 626 regime 25 was intended by the legislature to be an override an,

LL

Proceedings

1 override of the internal affairs doctrine. It is fairly
2 unique to New York and certainly the Defendants have not 3 demonstrated to your Honor that that statute is in any way
4 unconstitutional or any reason to ignore or avoid it. Thank 5 you, your Honor.

6 MS. FLATH: Your Honor, just one last point, 7 since you had raised the question of Blau and current and 8 former directors. Note in the very first line in that case, 9 plaintiff had attempted to sue 30 of the former and current 10 officers and directors, so it did relate to both. And,
11 again, because I think the point that we made at the end of 12 just it's relating to the exercise of their obligations in 13 the time that they were serving as a director or officer.

14 MR. BASKIN: And if I may, I have one last point, 15 your Honor, too. I understand your Honor declined to grant 16 our request for a sur-reply. Nevertheless, you want to 17 point out that section 327(b) does limit the Court's power 18 in relation to forum non conveniens under 327(a) and we 19 believe that the document put before the Court in 20 Mr. Chang's affirmation is sufficient to invoke that power 21 limiting rule of 327(b).

22 MS. FLATH: Your Honor, obviously denied the 23 motion to file a sur-reply. Certainly, we'll be happy to 24 respond if your Honor wishes to maintain it. We maintain 25 that it's not part of the motion here since it's not part of

Proceedings

1 a permitted sur-reply. But we'd be happy to address if your 2 Honor would like us to. Thank you.

3 THE COURT: All right. The motion before me is 4 to dismiss this case. I heard from the -- I heard from 5 counsel, from the parties, I reviewed their papers,
6 considered cases by my colleagues in the commercial
7 divisions in New York and Nassau County. And it is this 8 Court's assessment that the motion should be granted. The 9 Court is persuaded that the reasoning of Justice' Cohen and 10 Driscoll is sound.

11 And based upon the reasoning of those justices
12 with respect to the matters, the cases that were before 13 them, the City of Philadelphia versus Winters. And the 14 Aventura versus Arison matter English law dictates that 15 Plaintiff lacks standing to sue. The documentary evidence 16 here demonstrates that there is -- that the Plaintiff is not 17 a registered member of Barclays. There is an affidavit
18 searching the record with respect to identifying documents 19 -- searching the record of documents that would show who are 20 or are not members. And to that limited extent, that 21 affidavit I think qualifies as documentary evidence is 22 simply identifying a document that would show one way or the 23 other whether or not the Plaintiff is a registered member 24 and it does not.

25 There is an admission by attorneys in the course

LL

Proceedings

1 of their opposition that they could become a member which 2 speaks plainly that they are not members. So despite the 3 conclusory statement in the complaint, it is apparent that 4 the Plaintiff is not a registered member. That being the 5 case and because the membership requirement of the United 6 Kingdom's Companies Act is a substantive provision that it
7 had to be met here. And the shareholder of the English
8 company failed to meet it. The shareholder lacked standing 9 to bring the derivative claims on behalf of the company 10 because the membership requirement was substantive limit on 11 a shareholder standing to assert a derivative claim and not 12 merely a procedural hurdle.

13 The Supreme Court is obliged to apply it under 14 the internal affairs doctrine. The business corporation law
15 does not override the internal affairs doctrine on the issue 16 of standing to bring a derivative claim because it is a mere 17 statutory predicate to jurisdiction, which simply conferred 18 jurisdiction upon New York Courts over derivative suits on 19 behalf of out of state corporation, but did not require 20 application of New York Law in such suits. That's out of 21 the City of Aventura Police Officers Retirement Fund Versus 22 Arison; that's at 70 Miscellaneous 3d 234. The Court 23 understands that the holding for the City of Philadelphia
24 versus Winters as prepared by Justice Driscoll commercial 25 division sitting in Nassau County is similar.

LL

Proceedings

1 I understand that index number in that matter is 2 601438 of 2020. It is clear that to the extent English
3 common law is argued -- I take it that the Plaintiff is not 4 trying to argue that, but that the Defendants are hoisting
5 it upon Plaintiff. But to the extent that English Common
6 Law is at issue then the pleadings do not support the fraud
7 on the minority exception given the -- that the -- in this 8 case the -- the numbers don't add up that the 9 directors/officers who are alleged wrongdoers here at such a 10 minimal share of the overall interest of the corporation
11 that they could not be imposing their will on the minority.
12 So to the extent that the English common law will allow for 13 standing its particular requirements are not met.

14 The Court doesn't accept the idea that the 15 Culligan matter has somehow -- the Court doesn't accept that 16 the Culligan case dictates a different outcome nor does this 17 Court, its colleague, and Justice Cohen made clear in 18 Aventura Police Officers Retirement Fund versus Arison
19 Culligan concerned regulation of conduct within New York and 20 did not purport to alter settled New York Law on the 21 application of the internal affairs doctrine in breach of 22 fiduciary duty actions. In the Blau case it was also noted 23 that the First Department in Lerner versus Prince that 24 substantive law of a foreign corporation's place of a 25 corporation benefits. And Blau noted that nothing in

LL

Proceedings

1 Culligan would suggest the court not to follow Lerner. I
2 think the Court in Culligan wants to change the clear 3 precedence from Hart to Lerner, it most assuredly would have 4 stated just that and why.

5 And even Blau MD Money Purchase Pension Plan
6 Trust versus Dimer; it's at 215 New York Slip Op 32 909 (U).
7 I will note as well that the Court of Appeals in Davis
8 versus Scottish Re Group Limited 30 New York 3D 247 at 253
9 applied the internal affairs doctrine to derivative action
10 -- to a derivative action involving a foreign corporation.
11 The Court also notes that the distinction that Plaintiff 12 seeks to draw between the former and current directors is 13 irrelevant certainly to this matter. As to the matter that 14 -- as the actions that are under scrutiny are the actions
15 taken by the directors at issue here when they were current 16 directors. And so we are -- we would be asked to scrutinize
17 the internal affairs of this English company. If we're 18 doing that, we need to apply English law.

19 So for those reasons, I won't address the forum 20 conveniens argument except that there was no waiver of the 21 argument. But I do think that there is something to be said
22 for the fact that this argument is being made by New York
23 based Defendants on behalf of others is a -- maybe a little 24 difficult to swallow. I understand intellectually, but I 25 think it is a practical matter. It's a little difficult to

LL

Proceedings

1 swallow. But I will base my decision on the solid reasoning
2 of my colleagues, Cohen and Driscoll, on the commercial
3 division and we'll see what the First Department has to say.

4 I will direct that the counsel for the moving 5 party order the transcript of today's proceedings and 6 present it to the clerk of Part 43 for so ordering. That so
7 ordered transcript will be uploaded with the -- a short form 8 gray sheet order and that will be the -- that will serve as 9 the appealable instrument. I will have you stay on --

10 So, just to be clear, based upon the reasoning
11 that I've stated, the reasoning in the decisions by Justice
12 Cohen and the City of Aventura Police Officers Retirement
13 Fund versus Arison at 70 Miscellaneous 3d 234, which this 14 Court adopts wholeheartedly and incorporated by reference 15 here it is, together with the similar holding and City of 16 Philadelphia versus Winters at Index Number 601438 of 2020.
17 This is hereby ordered that the motion to dismiss is granted 18 in its entirety. And that it is hereby ordered that the 19 complaint is dismissed in its entirety. I will -- in as 20 much as the Court is making a finding that the Plaintiff 21 lacks standing to pursue the action, there is no basis even 22 for holding the complaint alive. So accordingly the 23 complaint is dismissed. There is no leave to replead. The 24 court reporter has put up her e-mail address information.
25 Do all parties see it?
